Location of residence

- The order of households listed in the 1880 census and deed records suggest the Paules’s lived at what became 84 N. Main St. For the most part, the census taker has listed families along the first block of N. Main St. in order from the square heading north. After the home of Jacob Miller was visited at 62 N. Main St. on the south side of the railroad tracks, the next 6 households visited in order were those of (1) George Dietz, (2) William Algier, (3) Henry Paules, (4) Daniel Weaver, (5) Noah Olp and (6) Catherine Meyers.

We know that Catherine Meyer lived on the northwest corner of N. Main St. and W. High St. That would indicate the other five households would likely be located between the railroad tracks on N. Main St. and Catherine Meyer's house. Below is the 1908 Sanborn Fire Insurance Map that shows the buildings located on the west side of N. Main St. between the railroad tracks and the intersection with Main and High St.

The dwelling at the corner of W. High St. and N. Main St. was not in existence in 1880, therefore leaving the buildings at 128, 130, 134, 138 and 142 and possible residences for the five households previously mentioned. Deed transactions (Deed book 6-Q-208) verify that Henry Paules, the third household visited in this section, purchased what is listed as 134 N Main St. (later re-numbered 84 N Main St.) from Catherine Meyer in 1881 (this being the 3rd residence north of the railroad tracks). Coincidentally, Henry Paules's household was the 3rd household visited after Jacob Miller's household and the property at 84 N. Main St. is also the 3rd dwelling north of the railroad tracks.

This residence is no longer in existence and has been torn down, it is now a parking lot along N. Main St.

- Samuel and Mary Ellen lived their adult lives in York City.
